LUNCH & LEARN WEBINAR

DOES THE POTATO HAVE A ROLE IN SAVING THE PLANET?

Our Presenter: Chris Voigt

For a 2-month period, Chris Voigt, the Executive Director of the Washington State Potato Commission, ate more potatoes than anyone else in the world. He was out to prove that potatoes were so nutritious that you could literally live off them if you had to. When he's not out promoting the potato, his normal day job with the Washington State Potato Commission is focused on managing potato research, opening new international markets, and working on legislative and regulatory issues. Chris is also an executive producer of the food and farming TV show, "Washington Grown". He is a former FFA State President and a graduate of Oregon State University. He lives in Moses Lake with his wife Stephanie where they raised 2 children. His real passion is spending time with his family pursuing numerous outdoor adventures such as white-water rafting, surfing, snow skiing, backpacking, and kayaking.
